a few very silly words expressive of " " " his haired of Christianity, For this " " a clergyman " " caused him to be summoned before a magistrate, who was silo a clergyman. The magistrate, instead of pitying him or remonstrating with him, committed him for trial and sentility to jail. At the next assizes he was brought before the judge. He had no counsel to defend him, but the son of the judge acted as counsel to prosecute him. The father and the son performed their naris with seal, and were perfectly successful. Under their auspices Poeley was found guilly. He was brought up for judgment. When addressed by the jury, his rostless manner, his wild and incoherent speech, his disordered countenance, and glaring eye betokened too surely the disease of his mind. But neither this nor the fact that he was ignorant, poor, and friendless produced any effect upon that stony hearted man who now held him in his gripe. He was sentences to be imprisoned for a year and nine months. The interests of religion were vindicated. Christianity was protected and her triumph assured by dragning a poor, harmless, and demented creature from the nesson of his family, throwing him into jail, and leaving his wife and children without novision, eliber to stare or to bog!" (Review of Mill on Liberty, Buckle's Misc. and Posthumous Works, vol. I, pp. 57-8, by Almost immediately Pooley became a violent maniac, and was removed from jail to the county lunatic asylum; and his case having attracted the attention of several philanthropic men, in response to their determined efforts, a pardon was granted him at the end of a few months. None the less, however, did Mr. Buckle visit his indignation on the judge and his son, and the episode, as is well known, ultimately proved the most important event in his life. (See Mr. Huth's "Life and Writings of Buckle," pp. 250 et seg.)

Now, the judge who tried, convicted, and ladge and his son, and the opisode, as is well known, ultimately proved the most important event in his life. (See Mr. Huth's "Life and Writings of Buckle," pp. 250 et seq.)

Now, the judge who tried, convicted, and sonteneed Pooley was Sir John Taylor Coleridge, afterward privy councillor, and the son who, without an opponent, prosecuted the blaspheming offender to conviction was no other than the present lord chief justice, then plain Mr. John Duke Coleridge.

But his lordship at that time did not confine himself to the office of prosecutor; he took upon himself the task of defending his father against the savage onslaught of Mr. Buckle. To go over Mr. Buckle's ground would be quite beside my object in bringing Pooley's case again to notice; our interest is in what the lord chief justice then thought as to blasphemy, and Christianity as part of the law of the land, and judges making precedents for themselves, &c. Without going more fully into particulars, let these passages serve as the keynote of the whole defonse, which may be examined by all interested in "Frascr's Magazine" for June, 1859:

That a judge selects who he will try, and where he will try them; that he can try or not try at his

That a judge selects who he will try, and where he will try them; that he can try or not try at his pleasure persons who are arraigned before him; that he can try or not try at his pleasure persons who are arraigned before him; but he can refuse, it he pleases, to put in force the law he is sent to administer, and choose which laws he will enforce and which he will not * * are matters as to which [Mr. Buckle] displays ignorance to a degree hardly credible. * • It is familiar to all persons of ordinary checation that a judge in the position of Sir John Coleridge had and could have no choice * * what laws he would or would not put in force.

Does not this afford a strange commentary on the general and somewhat free utterances in Foote's case? Lord Chief Justice Coloridge then strenuously defended his father (and incidentially himself) on the firm ground that a judge may not legislate, or disregard, or in any wise do anything more than merely administer the law; now he thinks a judge may take general and special notice of tenets and doctrines and notions entertained by individuals, at variance with the current of decisions, not only not set aside or overruled, but also just at this time most vigorously supported by his country's parliament in Mr. ported by his country's parliament in Mr. Bradlaugh's case. Then he was righteously indignant that any one could expect a judge to consider the popularity or rationality of holding some things to be offenses, against holding which to be such Mr. Mill and Mr. Buckle ing some things to be offenses, against holding which to be such Mr. Mill and Mr. Buckle conducted so vigorous a revolt, with what he declared "intolerable licentiousness of speech." How contrary his position now! Said Mr. Mill and Mr. Buckle, "a judge should note the character of the times in which he lives; he should heed 'the spirit of the age;' and he should nover adopt or countenance, for the purposes of dealing out penalties, those provisions and principles of the law which have become autiquated and fossilized in the judgment of intelligent, reasonable men." Mr. Coleridge's reply was. "No judge may do such; no single mind nay determine what is 'the character of the times,' what is 'the spirit of the age,' what provisions or principles of the law have become antiquated or fossilized, or who are the intelligent or reasonable among men. So to do and determine is a legislative function which a judge may no more usurp than he can accroach the royal prerogative." But presto, the lord chief justice—a vastly more important personage no more usurp than he can accroach the royal prerogative." But presto, the lord chief justice—a vastly more important personage than John Duke Coleridge—now visits his condemnation on the latter unfortunate individual, and is become the judicial exponent and champion of the identical views urged and supported by Mr. Ruckle and his com-

which shall we say, that Mr. Celeridge was right and Justice Celeridge is right, or the reverse? In either case we have an interesting illustration of what a vast difference a quarter of a century may make, even in one who may become a judge; and if such a thing who may become a judge; and if such a thing the state of the property o be possible in the spirit world, there must be now spreading over that portion of Mr. Buckle's immaterial residuant that ought to be when his face was in the flesh, something very like a grin at this remarkable achievement of time's whirligig. More Murder in Chicago. CHICAGO, May 20.—Authory Connelly, a saloon keeper, and Robert Bruce, alias Harry Curtis, of no recognized occupation, met in the former's saloon this evening. After drinking together, Curtis shot Connelly, the ball, of large caliber, passing entirely through his body. Connolly then shot Curtis through both thighs, close to the body. It is thought both will die. Curtis says Connolly and an-other man held him up some days ago and robbed him of $1.

The Wreck of a Man Comes Face to Face With a Lady-Mysterious Conversatton.

"There is your simon-pure tramp," said the hotel man on Saturday, and standing in front of the Ebbitt house was the man in question. He leaned against the iron railing, in all the shabbiness of his vagabondism, and every one about there noticed the remarkable fact that he was talking with a lady who stood in the waiting room, well dressed and apparently a traveling patron of the house. It struck all as most uncom-mon, and the fellow was decidedly uncomfortable under the scrutiny of which ha was the center, though he tried hard to appear indifferent, like one who had been accustomed all his life to lounge in front of first-class hotels and talk to ladies. The hotel man said he didn't know what the lady was doing around there, and when she noticed that she was watched, she looked nervously out of the window, said something in a low tone to the man, and he went away. Whether out of the window, said something in a low tone to the man, and he went away. Whether he pretended to be asking for money, and succeeded in getting some from her, or not, was not plain, but as he turned and went down around the corner he carelessly tossed a nickel in the air and caught it in his palm, all the time eying the men who stood about half carelessly watching his movements. After a while he came back, but seeing the same men still in the vicinity, he lounged for a moment by the treebox and disappeared.

Three men in a group were so curious as to

Three men in a group were so curious as to have theories of the performance.

One said he was a sailor, and had found, in passing the hotel, a face he knew, and could not resist the opportunity to stop and speak. The theory was not a bad one. The man was tanned by exposure, were a for can without tanned by exposure, were a fur cap without a vizer, and had clothes that evidently had been justpulled out of a trunk. He was appurently about 40, and the woman 5 or 10 years younger. The hotel man looked sharply at them, and she tried to appear like one waiting for somebody.

Another bystander had a theory that they were a separated couple met unexpectedly— she decent and with evidences of having got on fairly well in the world, and he gone to the dogs. That was not a bad theory either, and it was plain that their conversation was interrupted without being finished. The third of the party, being naturally suspicious, was sure they were hotel thieves, and that this mysterious conversation had to do with plans for robbing the house; but this theory was not a good one. Thieves are not so open in their conferences.

They disappeared, leaving speculations of a nearible remarked.

A Juvenile Masquerade at Dr. Mitchell's-Other Items of Social Interest.

A bovy of lovely little misses and merry youths took possession of Dr. and Mrs. Geo. H. Mitchell's residence, No. 1802 Sixteenth H. Mitchell's residence, No. 1802 Sixteenth street northwest, on Saturday evening, and gave themselves up to the thorough enjoyment of a pleasant fancy dress party arranged for them. Among the maskers were the Misses Lillie Mahan. Red Riding Hood; Maggie Allen, Patience; Cora Clay, Milkmaid; Katie Hogan, a granddaughter of the famous English member of parliament. Shephordess. Rolling. Allen, Patience; Cora Ciay, Milkmaid; Katie Hogan, a granddaughter of the famous English member of parliament, Shepherdess; Rolin Stubbs, whose pretty representation of "The Havana Cigar" would have been a charming sight even to one who is not a lover of the weed; Sadie Springe, Aurora; Lorena Sharp, Flower girl, and Masters Leonard G. Spencer, Æsthete; Willie Dudley, Highlander; George Dudley, Jew; Charlie O'Connor, Domino; Clarence Doyle, General, &c. Prof. Stoughton S. Doyle presided over the music, and Mr. Wm. M. Frisbie mystified the party with his clever tricks. Among those who dropped in on the pleasant little party during the evening were Commissioner Dudley, Prof. Spencer and lady, Col. Bailey and lady, Gen. Cecil Clay and lady, and, others. Mrs. Tibbetts, or "Aunt Nancy," as her friends call her, the venerable mother of the hostess, a sprightly lady of S4, participated in the enjoyments of the young people, including dancing, as though the hand of time had been powerless in asserting its influences. A bountiful supply of refreshments was served later in the evening, and the merry company departed well pleased with their entertainment.

Animals Free of Duty.

The secretary of the treasury has decided that to entitle animals to admission free of duty satisfactory proof must be made that they are specially imported for breeding purthey are specially imported for breeding pur-poses. He further defines the statutes as fol-lows: "The law does not require that the an-imals shall be imported solely for breeding purposes, but it does require that they shall be specially imported for breeding purposes (although they may be intended also, as mares usually are, for labor), and is understood to require satisfactory proof that one of the lead-ing purposes of the importer is that the ani-mals shall be used for breeding. If, upon the production of the formal proof, the collector has doubts, either from the character or conhas doubts, either from the character or condition of the animals, the general course of business, or from any other circumstance, that the animals are intended for breeding pur-poses, affirmative proof should be required on that point. If, for instance, mares are imported for the purpose of being placed at work on a horse railway, or heifers, cows, or ewes are imported for the purposes of slaughter, although in both cases they may be capable of breeding, they are in no proper sense specially imported for breeding purposes, and are not exempt from duty."
